RE: Reference Letter for CJ Romberger

To Whom It May Concern

I would like to take this opportunity to convey my pleasure in working with CJ Romberger of Wildwood, Inc., who served as a Co-Web Developer/Webmaster for an Accessibility Internet Rally (AIR) event spearheaded by Knowbility, Inc. www.knowbility.org. The initiative engages the IT community in a competition to create accessible web sites for community organizations like ours. My relationship with CJ began during the summer of 2003 when CASA of Travis County was selected as 1 of 25 local nonprofits to benefit from a complete redesign of our existing web site for a more innovative and accessible site.

CJ has qualities that reach far and beyond that of an ordinary web developer / webmaster. She is an individual that doesn't stop until she feels everything is perfect and reflects exactly what the organization wants. She never ceases to propose new database and CGI form ideas and changes that I never would have thought of, and takes a genuine and caring interest in the various projects we have asked her to do. I've been consistently impressed with her responsiveness, creativity, technical skill, and positive attitude.

CJ's help to redesign and republish our entire CASA of Travis County website to the Internet at www.casatexas.org has been a real gift to the organization. This site needed major revisions to be more user friendly, and also needed to rank higher in search engine indices to better serve its purpose. She has finished this task in a most impressive manner and the end result has far exceeded our expectations. Our web site's weekly hits have increases and more and more people are contacting CASA of Travis County to request information about our services. Through her work we are able to bring in new donors, retain CASA volunteer membership, and increase our exposure in the community. I attribute much of the success to CJ and her expertise.

Throughout this project CJ has demonstrated extraordinary talent, creativity, flexibility, and persistence in getting the job done. Over time I have developed a great working relationship with CJ, and I highly recommend her for any position within her talents. If further information is needed, please feel free to contact me.

Sincerely,

Karen Cox
